Educational Access

As part of the Environmental Stewardship (ES) and Countryside Stewardship (CSS) Schemes, the Government pays certain farmers to invite groups of the public to visit their farms to learn about the countryside. Groups can be school parties studying farming as part of their National Curriculum, or groups wishing to learn about food production, farming, wildlife conservation, landscape and historical features. These visits are free of charge to the group.

A fuller description of the types of visits available is contained in 'Educational Access-Information for Land Managers and the Public' available from Natural England offices or from the farmer.

Natural England and Sustainability

Natural England has the responsibility to conserve and enhance the value and beauty of England's natural environment and promote access, recreation and public well being for the benefit of today's and future generations.
